Three children were playing together one evening, just as it was getting dark and a bit too late for staying out. A grown-up passing by thought this was very wicked and took it upon himself to lecture sternly and for what seemed like great length on the hazards of walking home in the dark. The children listened with mock shame until he had finished, and with a shout resumed their little game. As soon as the stranger had stalked out of sight, they quickly finished and made off for home.
